

THE BOXES

Research dossier

A political drama about the last days of Herbert Chitepo and how his assassination affected the trajectory of post-independence Zimbabwe.

The research uncovers Lusaka in 1975 as a volatile sanctuary for the southern African liberation struggle. Herbert Chitepo led the Zimbabwe African National Union from exile until a targeted car bomb ended his life. The resulting crisis destabilized regional diplomacy and cleared the leadership pathway for Robert Mugabe. This film captures that escalating factional paranoia through the direct perspective of an ordinary Lusaka neighbor living beside the Chitepo compound.

Where this stands, and where it does not yet

Originality is claimed only relative to the titles above, never absolutely.

The narrative is framed entirely through the eyes of an ordinary Lusaka neighbor who observes the escalating factional paranoia surrounding the Chitepo compound.

None of the political films adopt an external civilian bystander who remains detached from party logistics.

checked against: Lumumba (2000), Judas and the Black Messiah (2021), The Good Shepherd (2006), Malcolm X (1992)

→ Center the story on a Zambian civil servant living next door to Chitepo who monitors the factional shifts with rising dread.

The film functions as an institutional procedural tracking the Zambian police team that attempted to prevent the car bomb explosion.

None of the historical titles focus on a host-nation law enforcement bureaucracy caught between diplomatic neutrality and counter-assassination failure.

checked against: Soundtrack to a Coup d'Etat (2024), Lumumba: Death of a Prophet (1991), The Battle of Algiers (1966), The Good Shepherd (2006)

→ Follow a Zambian Special Branch inspector trying to map out Rhodesian infiltration inside the liberation movement before the bomb detonates.

The drama concludes with an administrative commission that quietly covers up the true perpetrators to protect fragile frontline state alliances.

None of the existing political assassination stories terminate in a bureaucratic diplomatic compromise.

checked against: Lumumba (2000), Judas and the Black Messiah (2021), Flame & Citron (2008), Mutiny (2026)

→ End the film with the international commission drafting a deliberately ambiguous verdict to preserve the regional front against Rhodesia.
